

Corporate Style Guide

Purpose

This guide defines how the QA Agent should evaluate consistency within each consulting deliverable. The objective is not to enforce a universal style, but to identify the predominant style of the current document and detect deviations from that internal standard.

Review Philosophy

- Never assume a fixed corporate standard when the document presents a consistent internal standard.
- Learn the predominant formatting, terminology and visual conventions before identifying inconsistencies.
- Evaluate consistency within the same document, not across different projects.
- Objective language rules (grammar, spelling and punctuation) always apply.
- Stylistic choices are only flagged when they break the predominant document pattern.

Elements to Learn Before Reviewing

- Client and project naming conventions
- Terminology and abbreviations
- Title hierarchy
- Fonts and font sizes
- Margins and spacing
- Alignment
- Bullets and numbering
- Headers and footers
- Date, currency and percentage formats
- Tables, charts and captions
- Visual layout and recurring patterns

When to Report an Issue

- An element deviates from the predominant pattern.
- A terminology changes without justification.
- A visual component is inconsistent with the rest of the document.
- A formatting difference appears accidental rather than intentional.
- A language or factual issue is objectively incorrect.

Reporting Standard

Every finding should include the page number (when available), severity, category, objective description and a practical recommendation. Avoid subjective comments. Base every finding on observable evidence.
